Customer Reviews

This Nora Roberts book is fun to read - there's not a better way to describe it than that. It's not a story that requires a lot of time and mind energy but instead takes the reader on a pleasant journey. Adelia (Dee) Cunnane goes to live with an uncle in America after the death of her aunt who she lived with in Ireland. Dee has struggled to keep the family farm and finally agrees to sell it and goes to see her Uncle Paddy. He's a thoroughbred trainer at Royal Meadows, reportedly one of the finest horse ranches in America. When Dee arrives, she whole-heartedly agrees with that account and takes a job as a groomer. She's as happy as she's been in years, until she meets the owner, Travis Grant. They have the usual romantic struggles until Uncle Paddy has a heart attack. Both of them would do anything for Paddy, on his deathbed he asks that they marry so he can die a happy man. They concede, get married, and a miracle happens - Uncle Paddy makes a miraculous recovery (so is he as conniving as Daniel MacGregor?). Dee figures the marriage will end in divorce soon since Travis only married her to make his horse trainer happy. What she doesn't figure into the equation is that Travis has fallen hopelessly in love with her. The rest of the story is how they discover the other's feelings and understand that this is a love that was meant to be. This is a typical happily-ever-after romance but what makes it fun is the interaction between Travis and Dee, who has a temper that won't be leashed. While reading this book, I found myself laughing out loud in some places and smiling in others.
